(B60AD)
Rebuilt by Justinian (532-537)

Ulfilas had no choice but to follow the decision of the Council of 360 which settled on a compromise formula. Thus he no longer discussed the nature (substantia) of the divine persons. This decision brought the young Gothic Church into opposition with the Catholic majority which labeled all mediators as adherents of Arianism, which subordinated the Son to the Father And taught their subordinates differed: Although Viles rejected the Catholic position and rejected the Arian doctrine, neither his contemporaries nor the next generation were ready to accept his middle-of-the-road theology.

Constantine decided that undivided rule was impractical and chose FLAVIUS JULIANUS (Julian) to share power. He was Constantine II's half-cousin, who in 355 was recalled from studying at Athens to take command of Gaul and the troubled Rhine frontier. He gained considerable success, both in military security & in reforming and reducing taxation

Constantius II felt threatened by Julian's popularity & decided to reduce his power. In response, the army proclaimed Julian - AUGUSTUS in the west. CONSTANTIUS refused to recognize the elevation and was on his way to suppress his junior colleague when he died in Nov. 361
